I, ANIKA MARDIAN, declare:

1. I recently graduated from California State Northridge. I am interested in preparing for the October 2003 LSAT so that I can apply to law school for admission in fall 2004. I heard about TestMasters LSAT preparation courses from a friend of mine who recommended the course to me.

2. I then went to what I believed to be the TestMasters website at www.testmasters.com. I clicked on the icon of California to get a schedule of the LSAT classes taught in California this summer. After I clicked on the California icon, a page came up on my screen stating that TestMasters was not offering classes in California this year.

3. I called my friend who recommended TestMasters to me to ask him why TestMasters was not offering classes in California in 2003. My friend gave me the phone number of the TestMasters that I was looking for. I called TestMasters and learned that I had gone to the wrong website and that the real TestMasters that I was looking for is offering classes this summer.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed this 9 the day of June 2003, at Glendale, CA.
